

Public Health team at the 15th Science and Engineering Festival

18 March 2017 by Dr Nisreen Alwan

The PCPS “What is Public Health?” stand at the Southampton Science and Engineering Festival was very well received. We started off with a worrying moment in the morning while setting up as we were located very close to a stand with a dinosaur model that we were fairly convinced we could not compete with.

However, we had a constant stream of visitors at the stand throughout the day with several particularly busy moments. The taste test “Yum Edible Swaps” was very successful and definitely provided some food for thought. We gathered a lot of post-it notes on what people thought Public Health is, along with some engaging conversations.

Huge thanks to the main organisers of the Stand: Nida Ziauddeen and Robin Poole, and a special thank you to Paul Roderick for his help on the day.
